Because Photoshop's features are so complex, it's also a good idea to learn more about the programs that you will be using inside Photoshop. In this book, I frequently use commands called Actions and Presets that get saved in a special directory (`/PhotoshopActions` or `/PhotoshopPresets`) with your user account. An Action or a Preset is a tool that can be quickly recalled. After a tool is activated, you can then access the tool as it's been configured. * * * # Photoshop's bag of tricks Photoshop actually has three separate programs: Photoshop Creative Suite: This is the original program that started the graphic design revolution. Photoshop CS is the industry standard today. Photoshop Elements: This is a much smaller and less expensive program targeted at beginners or those who just want to edit photos. Lightroom: Like Photoshop Creative Suite, Lightroom is a photo-editing program with a better interface than Photoshop and a robust library of feature-packed editing tools. Lightroom can import and export photos and edit them from a computer or a mobile device. You also have a desktop version available that you can run on a PC or Mac. See Book I, Chapter 8 for more info on Lightroom. * * * ## Taking Clips of Content with the Grab Tool If you're not a graphic designer, you probably haven't seen the term `_clip_`. It's a term used by designers to select an area of content and copy or move that area to a different location. The `_Grab Tool_` in Photoshop CS6 is used to cut content from a photo or from another document or image file. The Grab tool enables you to select areas of the desktop or a folder, and it creates an icon that represents the selected content. You can then use that icon anywhere on the screen to jump to the selected area. If you hold down the Shift key when you select the icon, you can create multiple copies of the selected content. To use the Grab tool, follow these steps: 1. **Click the image you want to grab to select it.** The selection is made around the area that you clicked. If the area has a border, it's also selected. 2. **Click the Grab button in the toolbar.** A small icon representing the content is placed on your desktop. 3. **Hold down the Shift key and

Adobe Photoshop 2020 Free [Updated]

K9s are trained to identify specific drugs or chemicals by their smell. But would you believe that they are trained to detect marijuana, too? Police dogs are increasingly being called in to sniff out pot for officers, and they find it fast. In fact, the technique is being used to identify whether or not the presence of marijuana is traceable all the way back to an individual. In the video below, a drug-sniffing dog checks out a suspect and detects not only marijuana, but traces of cocaine and ecstasy as well. "Some of our officers come from other agencies, and they'll train their dog to respond when they bring them to the academy," said Atlanta Police Sgt. Brett Graves. "When officers come in, they'll be able to take the dog off leash, and they'll be able to identify marijuana. I believe there are a lot of cases that are just way beyond the scope of what we're going to be able to do." While the technique might seem to threaten the very purpose of the new standards, the real aim is that marijuana use by children or the elderly might actually be reduced. Should that be the case, then the unintended consequence might actually be a positive outcome. However, anyone concerned about keeping any of the following stills should contact their local police department before using any of the substances mentioned below: Hash and hashish; Marijuana; Cocaine; Ecstasy; Papaver somniferum; Euphorbia macphylla; Peyote (mescaline salts); Psilocybin/ psilocin (from Psilocybe species). Maybe the next Supervising Superdog should be trained to sniff out this stuff, too!

Winning Potential is a blog dedicated to video games. My approach to blogs is simple, provide helpful and informative information for all gamers, old and new. I will play a variety of genres as often as possible such as single player, online multiplayer, online multiplayer co-op and MMO, action adventure, puzzle, RPG, and more.

Tuesday, January 8, 2013 Did you know that popular genres such as the RPG's and Action Adventure titles aren't actually very good at what they do? By that I mean most of these popular genres these days and games in general aren't very original

Q: Custom Calendar widget - need to trigger event every hour, including weekends I am trying to use a custom calendar widget in a iphone app. The functionality I am trying to achieve is (or close to) The user's device clock is set to the local device time. The user logs in to the app using the custom login code. The user creates an event. When the user creates the event, the app sends an HTTP POST to a web server and receives a calendar event-id. The event-id is saved to a database table. The user now has a widget in their homescreen. The issue I have been struggling with is, on the weekend, the calendar widget does not update itself with the correct events, instead it will only update on weekday hours. e.g. User's device time is 11:30am on a Monday, User sets an event to start at 12:00pm on a Wednesday, At 12:00pm on a Wednesday, the user logs in to the app, creates an event and saves the event-id to the database table. User now has a calendar widget that shows events that are due on wednesday. The user's phone now automatically updates on 11:40am and 11:50am on the following Wednesday. I think the issue is in the way the widget is setup to update events. In the code I have written, it looks like I am using the iPhone's time to calculate how long until the event, not real time. I've looked through a lot of the source code in my widget, which is pretty detailed, and been wondering if there is some way to force the widget to update every hour, including weekends. I can't seem to find anything.

A: You need to implement UIDatePickerDelegate in order to adjust the time that the UI Updates. Your delegate function fires when the time has changed and should update your widget accordingly. Here is the code I have used to adjust the time:

- (void) timeChanged:(NSNotification *)notification { NSDate *now = [[NSDate date] retain];
    NSCalendar *cal = [NSCalendar currentCalendar]; [cal setTimeZone:[NSTimeZone defaultTimeZone]];
